America250 Special Initiative*

Georgia Humanities America250 special initiative supports public humanities projects that invite reflection on American history, civic values, and lived experience through a Georgia-centered lens.

Projects may examine how national ideals have been shaped, challenged, interpreted, and experienced over time, including through local histories, community narratives, and multiple or contested perspectives. America250 projects are not limited to events tied to the Revolutionary era or formal commemorations; rather, they invite reflection on the ongoing meanings and legacies of the American experiment as they relate to Georgia and its communities.

Participation in the America250 initiative is optional. Applicants are not required to address this initiative to be eligible for funding. Projects that do align with America250 themes may be considered as part of this special initiative.

Would you like this project to be considered under the Georgia Humanities America250 special initiative?
